Preface

The present work was inspired by the work of Claude Closky called “The first thousand numbers classified in alphabetical order,” dated 1989, available from <http://www.sittes.net>. The work of Closky is as indicated by its title. It consists of the following sentence, which in its entirety takes up almost ten pages:

Eight, eight hundred, eight hundred and eight, eight hundred and eighteen, eight hundred and eighty, eight hundred and eighty-eight, eight hundred and eighty-five, . . . , two hundred and twenty-three, two hundred and twenty-two, two hundred and two.

I say Closky’s work is as indicated by its title. More precisely, I assume that the work is as indicated, so that the ellipsis in the quotation above can be supplied by anybody who has the interest and time. I have not actually read Closky’s entire sentence; much less have I confirmed that it does indeed consist of a thousand numerical phrases, in alphabetical order, collectively naming all numbers of a thousand or less.

The present work is as its title indicates. If Roman numerals are understood as words using only the seven letters C, D, I, L, M, V, and X, then one can alphabetize these words. I have done this below.

At least I have tried to do this. I do not know how Closky composed his own work, and I do not remember exactly how (working in March, 2013) I composed the present work. I think I did not use an alphabetizing program, but used a lot of cutting and pasting of certain patterns. The resulting alphabetized Roman numerals are presented as an enumerated list; this enumerating is done automatically, and it allows one to check that there are indeed 3999 numerals in the list. The relevant lines in the underlying L<sup>A</sup>T<sub>E</sub>X file are:

\usepackage{paralist}
\setdefaultleftmargin{1cm}{-}{-}{-}{-}
\newcommand{\rn}[2]{#1\dotfill#2}
\begin{compactenum}
\item{\rn{C}{100}}
```

```

\item\rn{CC}{200}
\item\rn{CCC}{300}
...
\item\rn{MMMDCCLXXXVIII}{3888}
...
\item\rn{XXXVI}{36}
\item\rn{XXXVII}{37}
\item\rn{XXXVIII}{38}
\end{compactenum}

The `\setdefaultleftmargin` command ensures that the periods following the serial numbers of the Roman numerals are vertically aligned.

The composing of Closky's or the present work might afford the pleasure of solving a puzzle. The finished work might also provide visual pleasure.

The present work is laid out as if it could be useful. If you do not understand Roman numerals, you can look them up on the list below in order to translate them into decimal numerals. Conversely, using the index, you can convert decimal numerals to Roman numerals.

Could anybody find the table useful in this way? I imagine so. I have heard of secretaries and calculus students who do not understand that 0.5 and 1/2 are the same thing. A college teacher of mine once said he had never understood Roman numerals; he figured he had been absent from school on the day they were taught. I do not know why he did not learn them on his own.

It seems to me they are best understood as follows. Used alone, the letters of Roman numerals have the following values.

M	D	C	L	X	V	I
1000	500	100	50	10	5	1

They are always used in the indicated order, except in the following combinations, having the indicated values:

CM	CD	XC	XL	IX	IV
900	400	90	40	9	4

Thus CM means "C less than M," and so forth. A number of three digits in decimal notation is converted to a Roman numeral, digit by digit, according to the following scheme. (The digit 0 is converted to nothing.)

digit	replacement according to place
	hundreds	tens	units
1	C	X	I
2	CC	XX	II
3	CCC	XXX	III
4	CD	XL	IV
5	D	L	V
6	DC	LX	VI
7	DCC	LXX	VII
8	DCCC	LXXX	VIII
9	CM	XC	IX

An additional one, two, or three thousand is indicated by one, two, or three preceding letters M.

The foregoing seems to me a natural way to understand Roman numerals. An unnatural way is presented in the Introduction below. This Introduction might be taken as a parody of scholarly work. Studying something in great detail, the scholar may come up with an accurate explanation that nonetheless misses the point.

Introduction

A Roman numeral is a kind of word that uses only the letters C, D, I, L, M, V, and X. All such words are listed below, according to their alphabetical order. A translation into decimal numerals is provided. The index at the end makes it possible to translate a decimal numeral (of less than 4000) into a Roman numeral.

A Roman numeral may begin with any letter. However, the numeral may use each letter only as many times as are indicated in the following table.

C	D	I	L	M	V	X
4	1	3	1	4	1	4

Further restrictions are as follows.

1. Only an instance of X may break a string of letters C, and in this case, only one C can follow X.
2. No other letter may come between any two instances of the letter I.
3. Only an instance of C may break a string of letters M, and in this case, only one M can follow C.
4. Only an instance of I may break a string of letters X, and in this case, only one X can follow I.
5. Each letter may be followed only by the letters indicated in the following table.

	may be followed by
C	any letter
D	C, I, L, V, X
I	I, V, X
L	I, V, X
M	any letter
V	I only
X	C, I, L, V, X

6. However, strings of two or more instances of the same letter cannot follow certain other letters:

cannot be followed by two of
C	M
I	X
X	C

A Roman numeral stands for the number whose value is the sum of the numbers determined as follows.

C stands for one hundred, unless it is followed by M or D or is preceded by X. If it is followed by M, then the two together stand for nine hundred. If it is followed by D, then the two together count for four hundred. If C is preceded by X, then the two together stand for ninety.

D stands for five hundred, unless it is preceded by C as above.

I stands for one, unless it is followed by V or X. If it is followed by V, then the two together stand for four. If it is followed by X, then the two together count for nine.

L stands for fifty, unless it is preceded by X, in which case the two together stand for forty.

M stands for a thousand, unless preceded by C as above.

V stands for five, unless preceded by I as above.

X stands for ten, unless preceded by I or followed by C as above.
